Mark began his career at Eccleston and Wolf in September 2008, after completing a judicial clerkship with the Honorable Lynne A. Battaglia in the Court of Appeals of Maryland. At the University of Baltimore School of Law, Mark was an editor of the Law Review and a member of the Labor Law Moot Court Team. Mark's practice focuses primarily on the defense of general liability and casualty matters, serious personal injury and/or significant property damage claims, professional liability claims, Homeowner's Associations (HOA), community organizations and management companies, and employment/wage and hour matters. Mark has defended small business owners, attorneys, architects, title companies, realtors, apartment complexes, bars and restaurants, and other businesses. Mark also has experience with insurance coverage disputes involving Employment-Related Practices Liability, Commercial General Liability, Workers' Compensation Liability, and Professional Liability policies of insurance.
